

Sister's Spin

April 20, 2023

"What's your favorite color?" That's a question young children sometimes ask their teacher as they begin a coloring assignment. These days, as spring makes its presence known through the bursting of color in flowers and trees, it seems to me that God's favorite color is green. The beauty of the trees as their leaves began to burst forth, the grass, the various leaves of plants--various shades of green that blend to make up a beautiful world--not just in our country, but all over the earth. While it may seem that God hides that coloring over the winter season, and maybe into fall, if you look hard enough, you can still find shades of green through these seasons, too, maybe a little darker or a new variant, but still green. I, for one, am glad that God chose green as his favorite color. It is a sure sign of hope as one moves into a new season. I am also glad that God did not choose brown or purple, for I am not sure I would enjoy the world as much as I do if those were God's favorite colors. By the way, mine is yellow!
